

Case Study

Client: The Royal Oak, Paley Street

Project Title: Bespoke oak corner sitting area

Introduction:

The following case study outlines the thorough and enjoyable process of commissioning a piece of bespoke furniture, using a recent commission for a large corner sitting area as a case study example. It will demonstrate the steps that we go through to produce the perfect piece of furniture that will fulfil all your requirements.

Initial Design Brief:

Bespoke Joinery will establish the exact design parameters of your project by visiting you at the location intended for the work. The style, size and scope of the project will be evaluated with the client; some rough sizes and an approximate idea of budget for the project are also considered at this stage.

Final Construction:

Following the agreement of the full written quotation, Bespoke Joinery start the construction of the piece of furniture undertaken in the Egham workshop, This may take several weeks, depending upon the size and design of the piece. An estimated completion and delivery date will be provided but may be subject to change, as hand crafted furniture/traditional craftsmanship does take time. At this stage you are more than welcome to visit the workshop to view the construction of your commissioned piece of furniture in progress and hope you find the process of commissioning a piece of furniture from us an interesting and enjoyable experience. On completion of the work within the workshop, Bespoke joinery will deliver and implement the various elements of the project to meet client satisfaction.
